Safety Standards are on the Rise. Is Your Career?

Construction is a fast-paced, ever-growing industry with the opportunity for a lucrative career. The NYC government aims to make this typically high-risk industry safer than ever — from minimizing site hazards to helping all workers implement the best safety techniques.

That's where you come in. If you're working on a site with a Construction Superintendent, Site Safety Coordinator or Site Safety Manager, you're required to have 30 hours of site safety training.

But this isn't just a compliance requirement — it's your opportunity to grow your skills and elevate industry standards. You have a right to a safe, efficient worksite where you can do your job with confidence.

Become part of NYC's commitment to construction site safety:
