Subject line: Ramping up for the Race Across America!

Hi [FNAME],

2021 has already been an exciting year — and there's much more excitement to come. My team and I are training hard for the Race Across America, which we hope will raise $500k for the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society. The press is taking notice, so we've had some amazing coverage of our cause. You can catch the latest interviews and videos on our Facebook page.

I personally am spending at least 2 hours per day cycling, 6 days per week — and I'm aiming for more! It's been exhilarating to feel the wind in my face and enjoy Florida's incredible scenery.

I'm also working with a nutritionist and learning a lot about my body and what it can achieve. This has been an incredible personal journey for me as a survivor of Stage 4 cancer. I already knew I needed to appreciate my body's resilience. Now, I really do.

But the best part of training is knowing what's in store: that we can and will bike across America to raise money for such an important cause.

The race is in June, and it will be here before we know it! Our team of 8 cyclists (6 of whom are cancer survivors) is finally coming together at the end of March to train as a team. We'll be meeting in Delray Beach. After so many months of training, it's quite a feeling. We're so close to achieving our mission.

Have you had a chance to check out our giving page yet? You can learn more about my teammates and our stories. We're so excited to tackle the open road in June and help save more lives from cancer. Click below to support our mission.

There are so many miles to go, and I look forward to every single one of them. Follow along on our training journey on social media, and please support in any way you can. Together, we'll make history — and kick leukemia and lymphoma to the curb!

Best,

Marc Julien
